Successful Attempt to Sustain the Supremacy of the Laws in Illinois—Encounter between the Regulators and Flatheads—Deadly Conflicts.

PANICHA, Tuesday, Aug. 9.
A band of lawless, thieving desperadoes, who for the unenviable appellation of Flatheads, have for some time past committed the most outrageous depredations upon the peaceful portion of the population of the southern end of Illinois. This band of thieves number about 300.

For the safety of life and personal property, about 80 of the most respectable inhabitants of that State formed themselves into an association called the Regulators.

The aggressions perpetrated by the Flatheads became so insupportable, the Regulators determined to use the most vigorous measures to bring the culprits to justice. They accordingly procured writs for the arrest of ten or twelve of the leaders of the Flathead gang, and summoned the officers to aid them in the execution of the law.

The Flatheads hearing of this movement, the most determined of them, to the number of about 75, assembled in a log house, where, armed to the teeth, and making a sort of fort, they determined to stand upon their ground and give battle.

The Regulators having discovered the retreat, came and summoned the Flatheads to surrender, which request being refused, the Regulators threatened to charge on the log-house, and invited every honest man who was misled into it to leave.

About 10, seeing that the side of justice was the strongest, left their companions in the log-house, and the Regulators then charged upon the remainder of the Flatheads, and soon put them to a precipitate flight.

In the ensuing chase, two of the Flatheads were killed and three wounded. Three of the Regulators are said to have been mortally wounded.

The whole neighborhood is in the greatest excitement. The Regulators, assisted by the authorities, determined to turn this lawless band out of the country, are pursuing them in every direction.

A number of the Flatheads have fled over to Kentucky, and others have hid themselves in the swamps.
